BUILDING ON SOLID FOUNDATIONS

"This marks a significant milestone in the transformation to the Maneuver Center of Excellence," said Maj. Gen. Robert Brown, the MCoE and Fort Benning commanding general. "We have learned from our earliest days of war that combined-arms maneuver is the winning combination. This is a historic day. It's a monumental change for us, but training Armor, Cavalry and Infantry together makes sense." Under the reorganization, every Soldier, noncommissioned officer and officer in the Infantry and Armor branches will receive initial, mid-level and senior training at Fort Benning. In addition, 52 percent of all Soldiers will train here in some capacity.

"Training together from Day One will enable even greater success in our future complex operating environments," he said. "We integrate effectively in battle, so it is only appropriate we are integrated in training. We must train as we fight and now we can. Together, building on solid foundations, we will write a new chapter in Army history."
