Line of Departure – Connecting U.S. Army Professionals to the Best Professional Writing

<https://www.lineofdeparture.army.mil/>

Infantry and Armor are always in need of articles for publication. We encourage everyone who has valuable information to share with the Armor and Cavalry community to do so. We include articles written by officers, enlisted Soldiers, warrant officers, Department of the Army civilian employees and others. Writers may discuss training, current operations and exercises, doctrine, equipment, history, personal viewpoints (with applicability Army-wide) and other areas of general interest to the Infantry and Armor and Cavalry communities. We can also use relevant historical articles with an emphasis on the lessons we can learn from the past. Our fully developed feature articles are usually between 2,000 and 3,500 words, but these are not rigid guidelines. We prefer clear, correct, concise, and consistent wording expressed in the active voice.

When you submit your article, please include the original electronic files of all graphics. Suggested graphics are always appreciated. Please include the origin of all artwork and, if necessary, written permission for any copyrighted items to be reprinted. Authors are responsible for ensuring their articles receive an operations security/public affairs review through their respective organizations before being submitted. We have a form we can provide that can aid in the process. We also run short author biographies along with each article; we typically include current duty assignment, any previous assignments you'd like to include as well as military and civilian education.
